King Street, formerly merely the meeting place of the alleys or streets of old Gravesend village, is now one of the principal streets of the town. The London and County Bank stands on the site of some now demolished almshouses, while opposite is one of Gravesend's few relics of the past—the Elizabethan buildings of the National Schools.

Sir. The prospects in this town are very encouraging as Mr Wray, Manager of the Terrace says our works ought to be pushed more than what they are.
